Olympian plunges into spotlight

SWIM Britain's precocious diving talent Tom Daley is looking for an upset today to steal the limelight from American swimming great Michael Phelps and his march towards a record eight gold medals.

Daley's youth (he's 14), cheery grin and diving prowess have made him a media sensation in Beijing and back home in Britain but he faces tough task to win a medal in the 10-metre synchronized platform competition, with partner Blake Aldridge.

Today will be another big day of swimming at the Beijing Games, with Phelps hoping for a second gold in men's 100-metre freestyle relay. The 23-year-old swimming sensation destroyed his own world record to win his first gold yesterday. REUTERS

Gas explosion rocks Toronto community

Propane plant fire forces thousands to flee homes

As the flames died down from yesterday's massive series of explosions at a Toronto propane plant, they left behind a cloud of outrage.

Thousands of people, forced to flee their homes, are demanding answers from the city as to why Sunrise Propane Industrial Gas was allowed three years ago to build a distribution plant in a long-established residential area near Wilson Avenue and Keele Street.

A 25-year veteran of the fire department, Bob Leek, died fighting the conflagration. A Sunrise employee was missing and believed also to have died. He reportedly was last seen heading toward the fire.

But the neighbourhood "got off very lucky," said Toronto Fire Division Commander Bob O'Hallarn, though the pre-dawn blast shattered windows over a wide area and flying debris damaged buildings hundreds of metres away.

"It sounded like an atomic bomb," said Fernando Caschera, 56. "My father wakes up and he goes, 'What are you making so much noise for?'

"It sounded like an atomic bomb."

Fernando Caschera, area resident

"I said, 'Dad, that wasn't me.' Then the next explosion ... I said, 'Get out! Get out! Get out!'

As many as 12,000 people within a 1.6-kilometre radius of the plant were forced into the streets, most in their night clothes. But only a handful needed hospital care for minor injuries, O'Hallarn said.

That didn't make them any less angry. Residents described their neighbourhood as a tight-knit community where extended families live on the same street.

Josei Miceli, 59, who has been there for 40 years, said it's full of elderly people. There was no consultation with locals about the propane plant, she said.

"We were concerned when this company moved at the end of the street," said Miceli, who fled her home with her Yorkshire terrier, Harley. "But we weren't even advised that they were going to be there. They just moved in."

The owner of Sunrise was said to be out of the country. The fire continued to burn last night but was declared "under control."

Several people described being roused from their sleep by a series of rolling explosions, their homes brightly lit by orange fireballs soaring into the sky.

"I thought it was a terrorist attack," said Carlos Montoya. Others feared an earthquake or a jetliner crashing down on them.

Walking around in a new pair of lungs

TRANSPLANT One year ago, he wished for new lungs and a chance to run with his friends. Yesterday, 11-year-old Thomas Quinet lived that dream.

The recent double-lung transplant recipient took part in the Starlight Children's Foundation Dream Walk.

"Because I'm still here, I'm just happy to be with them and happy to be running, walking again," said Quinet.

It has been a long, painful fight, made easier in October after a double lung transplant. The new lungs will give the Cystic Fibrosis patient another seven to 10 years of better health.

"Like all families in this situation, we worry each day," said his father, Marc Quinet. "We get up, there's a whole host of medications to take, routines to follow. It's complete commitment, you know? Yet you have to give room for him to be a kid."

Fresh off a medal-winning week at the Canadian Transplant Games in Windsor, Thomas walked yesterday for the Starlight Children's Foundation. He wanted to do the walk to help kids just like him.

"Everyday that I work with them I learn so much more and I'm even more humbled each year from it as well," said Brita Gerwin of the Starlight Children's Foundation.

"They are the source of my inspiration on a daily basis and I find my strength from them."

Parking meters move to the 'burbs

Parking meters have moved into Ottawa's suburbs, with the first meters now standing in Nepean's Centrepoin neighbourhood. Ottawa's new parking strategy will see parking meters placed outside the core and, according to councillor Rick Chiarelli, allowing meters in Centrepoin was a compromise to stop the possibility of paid parking at Ben Franklin Place. Chiarelli said Ottawa residents will soon start seeing more parking meters on streets throughout the suburbs.

Local Chinese community hopeful that host country will benefit from the Games

TRACEY TONG

Whether Canadian-born or newly arrived, Ottawa's Chinese community members are basking in the reflected glow of the Beijing Olympics.

The summer Olympics, which kicked off in Beijing on Friday, have provided a weekend of pride for a local Chinese community that is looking for China to emerge from the isolation tion that has long marked the growing superpower's relationship with the globe.

"There's so much culture there. And this can show the world what China can do," Kate Thai, a shop owner on Somerset Street in the Chinatown area of Ottawa, said yesterday.

The lead up to the Games have been marked by protests over China's human rights record. But the Olympic spirit is a way to engage the Chinese and showcase the country's ancient culture and its gifts to the world, say supporters.

"China always gets so much bad press," said Grace Ko-Foster. "Hopefully, this puts China in a good light because it's a great, beautiful country."

Beijing is a beautiful place to hold the Olympics, said Yiping Wang, an employee at Chinatown's Ju Xiang Yuan Restaurant.

"A lot of people are happy the Olympics are being held there," said Wang, who is cheering for athletes from her native country and Canada.

"It's a big deal that they're hosting it," she said.

Customers have been arriving to watch the Games on a screen that's been set up for the occasion, she said.

Because the Chinese pay close attention to detail, China will put on a good event, predicted Ottawa's Karen Qiu, who is originally from Qing Tau in northern China.

"We're very proud," she said of the Games. "Everyone is really excited. We talk about it every day."

When watching her favourite Olympic events, which include basketball, swimming and weightlifting, she finds herself cheering for the Chinese.

Canadian-born Toronto resident Carolyn Tan said she roots for Canada, but said that hosting the Olympics will be good for China.

THEFT Armed with knives, two suspects entered a Fallowfield Road Kentucky Fried Chicken and fled with cash. Ottawa police said the suspects are described as black males, between 15 and 17 years old, approximately five-foot-10 tall with slim builds. Only Olympics make jumpers miss it

TIM WIECLAWSKI

EQUESTRIAN It's not the Olympics. But if Ian Millar didn't have to be over there, he'd have been here.

After bypassing the region last year, international show jumping leaped back into Ottawa yesterday at the first of two major tournaments wrapping up at the Nepean Equestrian Park.

"This is one of the only grass fields in Canada, other than Spruce Meadows, which is realistic show jumping," said Sandy Patterson, who is the coach and trainer for 15 riders and horses at the competition. "This is what show jumping is all about, in a big field like this."

Despite many top riders being at the Olympics, a number of former Olympic and national team members were riding here over the weekend. Perth-based Olympian Ian Millar is the honorary chair of the tournament, but flew to Beijing shortly after the event's opening to compete at the Olympic games.

"Everyone says this is where show jumping is at, in this area," said Jenna Thompson from Calgary, who rode in the grand prix on her horse Zeke. "Everyone comes out here. All those guys that are over at the Olympics, I know they'd be here."

Patterson said there are few venues that have the same quality of footing as the Nepean Equestrian Park and said it's nice being able to bring local jumpers to compete with top athletes on such a great field.

The event attracted riders from across Canada and the northern United States. Many riders will stay to also compete in the Kubota National Show Jumping Tournament, starting Wednesday.

"People love to come and jump on this, their horses really love this ground. That really is a draw," said show manager Ainsley Hayes. "The people of Ottawa are so supportive. They were really disappointed when it was cancelled last year."

Thompson, 30, would like to be competing in the 2012 Olympics, but said there's a reason the average age for athletes on the equestrian team is in the forties.

"It's just experience. You can't mimic being in the ring, you've got to get in there over and over again," she said. "You have to have a great horse and it's hard to find that perfect match."

a circus, they're not meant to be under a tent," said animal rights activist Michelle Thorn of the shows, some of which feature animals such as dogs, Arabian horses and elephants.

The company hired to provide the entertainment insists the animals are well taken care of. "Better medical care, proper diet, regular exercise, proper mental stimulation. They live twice as long in captivity as they do in the wild. It's definitely better for them," said Larry Solheim of TZ Productions.

Between 1,500 and 2,000 people attend every show including many children. "I am surprised that people think it's okay and that they don't realize what's happening to these animals," said Thorn.

The Ottawa Humane Society says the animals have adequate food, water and shelter. Yet it released a statement calling for an end to exotic animal entertainment in Ottawa.

The protesters say that's all it can do since Canada's anti-cruelty laws don't do enough to protect performing animals.

Air, commuters hazy over shelter smoking

My bus shelter karma has finally caught up with me.

Eons ago, in a different town, in a different time, and long before the introduction of smoking bylaws, I was a smoker. I smoked in restaurants, at work, in cars, and above all, while waiting for the bus. Usually in an enclosed shelter where the other commuters were forced to inhale the exhaust of my addiction whether they liked it or not.

Good times.

On Track

Nadine Doolittle

nadine.doolittle@metronews.ca

These thoughts come to me as I wait at the cramped Rideau Centre stop, inhaling the stream of smoke from a fellow commuter's cigarette. Because a funny thing happened on my way to becoming a non-smoker 22 years ago: I developed an allergic reaction to cigarette smoke that is worse than if I had never smoked at all! Isn't karma great?

Doesn't smoking man realize there's a bylaw? If I ask him to put his cigarette out, will he respond with profuse apologies, tidily dropping the butt in the receptacle provided? We all know how confusing those signs picturing a cigarette with a big red slash going through it can be.

Many observers of public transit knew that the no-smoking bylaw announced in November 2007 would be difficult to enforce and it appears the cynics were right. Complaints of smoking at OC Transpo stops, shelters and stations are legion. Under the law, smoking is only permitted nine metres (about 30 feet) away from any transit services property line and nine metres from any bus stop on a city street.

Yet, despite a hefty fine of $150 to $5,000, the message isn't getting through to some people.

The city is out of the "education" phase of the bylaw process and strict enforcement is presumably a fact of life for smokers in 2008. Transit cops are authorized to fine individuals caught breaking the bylaw, but they can't be everywhere at once. Eight months in and smoking man can happily puff away with impunity.

Habits are hard to break and many smokers find it hard to understand that the open air isn't so open when five or six people are puffing away. I used to be one of them. Education, enforcement and more education are effective, but they take time to see results.

In the meantime, I'll hold my breath and hope that the old smoker's adage holds true: The moment you light up, the bus comes.

lish drug treatment facilities in Ottawa.

"We thought we'd kill two birds with one stone. We'd say farewell to the lady and at the same time raise some money for a worthwhile cause in our city," said Congress Centre chairman Jim Durrell.

"It's meant to be a chance to come and say goodbye and have good times. (The Congress Centre) has entertained a lot of people over the last 25 years."

The September 4 event will take place just hours after the Congress Centre officially shuts down for two and a half years to undergo a $159 million redevelopment.

Event co-ordinator Jeff Turner, with the United Way, said the timing presents challenges, as there will be no kitchen facilities or Congress Centre staff for the event. Instead, sponsor restaurants will provide food and volunteers will work the floor.

"We're hoping that sponsors cover the hard costs, so the more people we get out the more money we raise."

With 2,000 tickets available at $50 each, Turner said raising $100,000 is a reasonable goal.

The campaign officially launched in June when Premier Dalton McGuinty announced the province would cover the operating costs of both centres. The United Way is coordinating the fund raising campaign.

Project manager Caroline Kayll said negotiations are already underway to secure the building sites for the new treatment centres.

Questions linger after explosion

Location of propane facility near residential neighbourhood cause for concern

The houses were just across the street, and had been for quite some time.

Industry experts say propane facilities like the one that erupted in flames yesterday are commonly located on the edge of cities, and then the cities grow in around them. But residents forced to flee their homes in Toronto after yesterday's blast say Sunshine Propane moved in only three years ago — and the houses were already there.

Michael Birk, professor and head of the department of mechanical and materials at Queen's University, said that there have long been discussions about changing the regulations that allow propane facilities to locate near residential areas, but that little has changed over the years. He said propane facilities are often located near condos and apartment buildings — which is really no surprise, because people want easy access to energy. But they don't want it next door. "There are people all over the world who don't want these facilities next to their houses," Birk said. "You can guess why."

The issue of proximity aside, Birk said propane technology is well designed and very safe, and that industry standards are frequently updated. He said these kinds of explosions are bound to happen occasionally, but fortunately that they often happen on rail lines in the middle of nowhere.

In a statement, the Propane Gas Association of Canada said the industry "has an excellent safety record and incidents like this are extremely rare."

Sunshine Propane, which sells everything from bulk propane to home heating tanks, did not provide comment last night.

Serious about North

Pledge to protect boreal forest offers hope

Science Matters

David Suzuki & Dr. Faisal Moola

Are Canadian politicians finally paying serious attention to the environment? Recent events and announcements give us reason for optimism.

The Ontario government's recent commitment to protect 50 per cent of its intact boreal forest offers further hope that governments are getting serious about protecting the planet.

On July 14, Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty committed to preserve 225,000 square kilometres of northern boreal forest under the province's Far North Planning Initiative. That's an area one and a half times the size of the Canadian Maritimes!

It's a significant commitment, and it's something more than 1,500 of the world's scientists had asked for, including us.

The boreal forest stretches across the northern part of Canada, touching almost every province and territory and covering 35 per cent of the country's total land mass.

It represents about one third of the world's circumpolar boreal system and one quarter of all intact forests remaining on the planet.

The region supports three

billion migratory songbirds and more than 200 species of animals, including dozens of threatened or endangered species such as woodland caribou, grizzly and polar bears, wolverine, lynx, and white pelican.

The announcement is significant not just in terms of conservation but also because it marks the first time a government in Canada has explicitly recognized the role nature conservation must play in combating global warming.

The boreal's forests and peatlands absorb and store massive amounts of carbon, making them a hedge against global warming caused by emissions from human activity.

Scientists estimate that Ontario's northern boreal alone absorbs 12.5 million tonnes of carbon dioxide emissions a year.

With this announcement, Ontario has taken an important and courageous step, one that we hope other provinces will follow.

For example, Quebec has protected less than five per cent of its own boreal forest, and although it has plans to increase this, it has yet to make a commitment as visionary as Ontario's.

The recent attention governments have been paying to the environment are positive signs.

But successful conservation efforts can't be limited to aspirational goals announced at news conferences. We all have a responsibility to make sure governments live up to their commitments.

Air quality index hits Net

POLLUTION Each year, an estimated 6,000 Canadians die prematurely as a result of air pollution. Even more are hospitalized for respiratory or cardiovascular illnesses or suffer minor effects, such as coughing or eye irritation.

In order to minimize their exposure to noxious pollutants, and take steps to reduce emissions from their own activities, Canadians need to know when the quality of the air they breathe poses a risk to their health.

The new Air Quality Health Index, found at www.airhealth.ca, is the first index of its kind to take into account how the level of exposure to multiple pollutants can affect your health.

Hourly readings of current conditions and maximum forecasted values for today, tonight, and tomorrow are represented using a colour-coded numerical scale: 1 to 3 is low, 4 to 6 is moderate, 7 to 10 is high, and 10+ is very high.

The index also provides advice to the general population and those who are sensitive to air pollution—such as children, the elderly, and people with existing cardio-respiratory problems—about how to adjust their outdoor activities when pollutant levels are high.

The program will be available in more than a dozen communities across British Columbia as well as communities in the Greater Toronto area. It is also slated for expansion to other major cities in Canada in the near future. NEWS CANADA

Water, water everywhere

Canada's water use averages out to 1,600 cubic metres of water per capita each year. This is double the amount used in France per person, nearly four times the water use of the average Swede and more than eight times that of the average Dane, according to Greenology: How To Live Well, Be Green And Make A Difference by Tanya Ha.

Less is more mantra for laundry products

"Anxiety attack, aisle 2." That would be laundry products.

Grocery store shelves are jammed with boxes and bottles of detergents and bleaches whose labels announce new formulas: Ultra, 2X Ultra, 3X Concentrate, Coldwater HE Concentrate.

Unlike ever-expanding clothes sizes — more Xs, more waistband — laundry products are shrinking. New condensed formulas, say manufacturers, are more eco-friendly, requiring less packaging, less plastic, less water, less gas to ship.

Fine. Small is beautiful — but bewildering for the busy shopper now responsible for Mother Earth and the family budget, never mind clean clothes.

Dr. Laundry feels consumer pain. "Everything right now is in a state of flux," says Harold Baker, a.k.a. Dr. Laundry, technical spokesperson for Clorox, makers of Jaxex.

"We're changing over to high-efficiency washing machines, concentrated laundry products, and even clothes with different finishes. There's so much going on."

It's a leap of faith for the consumer to use less and get the same good results, he says. "It's counterintuitive. We're used to buying bigger."

Concentrated laundry products are offering consumers a greener choice for cleaning clothes.

That was the problem 10 years ago when Procter & Gamble, makers of Tide and other brands, first tried compacted formulas.

Since then, consumers' environmental concern has evolved. As of May, all of P&G's liquid laundry detergents are now condensed. And this time, all major manufacturers are on the shrink-the-plastic and save-the-planet bandwagon.

But just how eco-friendly are these less-is-more products? Not very if consumers pour in too much.

"For the environmental benefit, it's absolutely imperative that the consumer use it properly," says Joanne St. Godard, executive director, Recycling Council of Ontario.

Harrington claims PGA Championship after winning British Open last month

Irishman Padraig Harrington putted superbly over the closing stretch to seal his second consecutive major title with a two-shot victory at the PGA Championship yesterday.

One month after successfully defending his British Open crown at Royal Birkdale, Harrington held off the challenge of playing partner Sergio Garcia and American Ben Curtis with a four-under-par 66 at Oakland Hills Country Club.

The Irishman edged ahead by sinking a 10-foot birdie putt at the par-three 17th before ramming in a 15-footer to save par at the last for a three-under total of 277.

"I knew that I had the opportunity to get the putt in first," Harrington told reporters of his birdie on the 17th green where Spaniard Garcia struck his tee shot to four feet.

"That was important. I knew if I holed it, I probably would win the PGA. If I missed, Sergio would probably win the PGA. So it was down to that and I hit a lovely putt. I read it exactly how I wanted it and it did exactly what I expected."

Harrington became the first European to win the tournament in 78 years, since Scottish-born Tommy Armour won in 1930.

He also became the fourth player after Walter Hagen, Nick Price and Tiger Woods to win the British Open and PGA Championship back-to-back.

Japan's Kitajima, Zimbabwe's Coventry create new world standards

Japan's Kosuke Kitajima and Zimbabwe's Kirsty Coventry set new swimming world records early this morning during another electrifying session in the Water Cube at the Beijing Games.

Bush gets treated to U.S. razzle-dazzle

BASKETBALL The millionaire stars of the U.S. basketball team swept past hosts China in the showcase match-up of the Olympics, watched by tens of millions on Chinese television and cheered on by U.S. President George W. Bush.

Talismanic giant Yao Ming, flag carrier for China at the opening ceremony, could not protect his colleagues from the speed and power of the NBA professionals.

Ming, who plays with the Houston Rockets, scored 13 points in the 101-70 loss to the U.S. in what was billed as the most watched basketball game in history.

Bush and his father, former President George H.

W. Bush, huddled with the U.S. team ahead of the game to wish them luck.

"What's up, pops?" NBA scoring champion LeBron James quipped to Bush's ageing father.

Los Angeles Lakers guard Kobe Bryant, the NBA's MVP, won a huge cheer from the star-dazzled home supporters but the loudest shout from the raucous 16,000 crowd was for Ming, China's favourite athlete along with 110m hurdler Liu Xiang.

The U.S. team is still smarting from winning only bronze at Athens in 2004 and has nicknamed itself the "Redeem Team". They have joked they will be unable to return home without the gold.

Make work the cool place to be

Some tips on how to beat the summer heat

RAFAEL BRUSILOW
for Metro Canada

When the air conditioner blows out at work, the summer heat can be almost unbearable.

Luckily, with the right fashion approach as well as a few office tricks, keeping cool in the workplace can still be possible.

Workplace style expert and marketing director Donna Rosati says beyond the obvious things such as wearing lighter, breathable fabrics like cotton and summery, sun-reflecting colours, men and women can make other, cooler choices at work.

For women, choose open-toed footwear (but not flip-flops) and remember to moisturize your heels so they don't start to look like they're covered in cracking, decades-old paint. And throwing off your shoes completely is a no-no.

"Feet tend to get sweaty in the heat, but resist the temptation to take off the shoes." Donna Rosati

When faces start to melt, Rosati says blotting powder can be a lifesaver so keep a secret stash handy — but for heaven's sake don't apply it in public.

"Head to the bathroom for some private time if you're going to do that," Rosati said.

For guys, wearing a thin undershirt beneath your business shirt can not only keep you cool but help ensure you don't look like you just survived a water fight. An undershirt will pull sweat away from your body, cooling you off while preventing your actual shirt from getting soaked.

Short-sleeved dress shirts are also acceptable in the workplace, but never with a suit jacket or tie attached.

Inside the actual office, keeping unnecessary lights off helps since light bulbs can give off a large amount of heat, and keeping blinds closed might take away your nice downtown view but at least it will reduce the amount of heat being produced in your office due to sunlight.

Another common heat-beating trick in the workplace is to use a personal fan, which plugs into your computer's USB slot and can be attached to your laptop body or keyboard to give you a small but steady breeze as you type.

You may lose your office's downtown view, but closing the blinds can help you lose some heat, too.

Hop, skip and a jump to flip, soar and a leap

Diane Peters

Ever wonder what those lithe gymnasts romping across the mat in China this week will do when they grow up? You can't vault competitively forever.

But you can flip, soar, leap and balance for pay audiences, at least into your late thirties.

That's what Montrealer Stacy Clark, 38, does. She started gymnastics at age six and competed at the national level until a back injury made her quit in her mid-teens. "It was hugely disappointing. When you do a sport like that, which takes up so much of your time, it really defines you." She then had a "normal" life and went to Ryerson for media arts and got a job in advertising in Toronto.

She was 26 when she saw an outdoor flying trapeze rig and people doing aerial stunts. "Wow, I really have to try that," she said to herself. So she signed up for a circus class at Harbourfront Centre and took to it immediately. Eventually, she was taking classes four nights a week.

She met professional dancer Robin Szuch and the two worked well together. Realizing no one in Canada was doing circus work as street performers, they created High Strung Aerial Dance in 2000. They had a portable 20-foot-high trapeze made and landed their first gig within a few months.

Weekends were soon filled with outdoor performances in summer and corporate gigs in winter. Clark kept working, but her boss gave her the summer of 2003 off to perform. She quit the following spring when the company was offered, in quick succession, work on a TV show, a trip to Japan and a job with the Canadian Opera Company.

High Strung's street show combines theatre, comedy, acrobatics and aerial stunts. Clark wears a bun and plays the "straight" character while Szuch wears pigtails and is a total goof.

While maybe not as gruelling as competitive athletics, this is a physical job that Clark knows she can't do forever. She recently moved back to Montreal to take a job with Cirque du Soleil as a talent scout. Her employer, of course, lets her take time off for performances.

"If my body hurts ... then I don't want to do this. (But) right now, it's the greatest job on earth."

The Lowdown

Job title: Aerialist

Salary: "I make as much as I did as an account director at an advertising agency."

Education: While Clark went the recreational training route, there are accredited circus schools across the country

Best Part of the Job: Best Part of the Job: "Keeping fit is a perk, but the best part is that I love it."

Worst Part of the Job: Worst Part of the Job: "We don't have a crew, so we have to do everything ourselves."

Diane Peters once hawked magic pens at the Canadian National Exhibition. She's now a writer and part-time journalism instructor.

Comedian Mac dies at 50

Pneumonia claims life of popular Kings of Comedy, Ocean's 11 star

Comedian and actor Bernie Mac, who starred in one of U.S. TV's few black sitcoms and appeared in the Ocean's 11 movies, died in Chicago on Saturday after a bout with pneumonia. He was 50.

Publicist Danica Smith confirmed the death in a statement but gave no further details. "We ask that his family's privacy continues to be respected," she said.

Reactions poured in from Hollywood, which was taken by surprise because two days ago, Smith said he was "responding well to treatment" and remained in "stable condition."

"The world just got a little less funny. He will be dearly missed," said George Clooney, who starred with Mac in the Ocean's trilogy of hit box office films.

Mac was hospitalized in Chicago on August 1, and Smith said then his illness was unrelated to a chronic tissue inflammation called sarcoidosis, which had been in remission since 2005.

Mac achieved national prominence after joining the Kings of Comedy stand-up tour in 1997 with Steve Harvey, D.L. Hughley and Cedric the Entertainer. Tapping into an underserved market of middle-class blacks.

In 2001, The Bernie Mac Show debuted on Fox, drawing from Mac's personal life. He played a married stand-up comic reluctantly thrust into parenthood when he takes custody of his sister's three children after she enters rehab.

Brenneman reflects on therapy sessions

Actress and husband sought counselling

BY PONTUS HAMMARLUND
Metro World News

Fans may always associate actress Amy Brenneman to her role as a judge in the TV series Judging Amy, but these days she is practising psychology in Private Practice — and she has a lot of experience to draw from.

"Yes, I'm in therapy right now," Brenneman says. "After one year of marriage we went for counselling. That was after having been a couple for three years and married for one. But it wasn't really until then that we became man and wife for real."

The man is director Brad Silberling, and he and Brenneman have been married for 14 years and

"My husband and I are still talking about it. We were just two people who were trying to figure things out."

just two people who were trying to figure things out. There was so much tenderness during the process."

These days, Brenneman is a lot more open and laid back, and is happy to discuss most things, like Botox.

"I tried (Botox) because I'm 43 years old and have wrinkles," she admits. "And I don't like wrinkles. But I had a mad dermatologist that was like a pusher — 'do you want more?' It was bizarre, I couldn't move my face and I'm actually paid for being able to express complex emotions with my face. If I had been a model it would have been a different thing. So it was nothing for me. I dye my hair and wax my legs, that's enough."

Actress Amy Brenneman stars in the series Private Practice.

Actor Philip Seymour Hoffman, left, is to make his West End debut as a director by taking charge of Riflemind, which chronicles the trials of a rock band reuniting after two decades. The show is set to open next month. IMDB.COM

Basements turn cosy

Interior Divine

Ah! The humble Canadian basement! A potentially useful and very comfy space... or an over stuffed nightmare that does little more than scream 'past tense.' Our first word of advice is — PURGE! So many family rooms are crammed with a ramshackle selection of furniture (most of which never even gets used) so either give it away or send it to the dumpster.

Problem Solving

Paint ceilings a lighter tone than walls to effectively raise perceived head height. It's also important to keep ceiling lines simple by removing Crown moulding and cornice. De-fuss further by taking away picture and dado rails to stop your walls looking 'chopped up' and therefore shallower.

Colour

Limit bolder colour to easily changeable accessories and ornamentation. Applying stronger tones won't only darken space, it will also limit design flexibility further down the line.

Lighting

Avoid overhead pendant lamps. A well planned project will still look wonderful with shallow ceiling mounted tracks, side lighting, pot lights or 'wall washers.'

Flooring

We avoid wooden floors in basements unless we're absolutely certain there's no possibility of damp. Carpet is potentially serviceable. However, while it's tempting to select all wool, we recommend choosing a product with a higher man-made content as it's more resilient to moisture and mould. That said, our preferred lower level flooring option is tile. Whether slate, ceramic or stone, it provides a durable finish that is less likely to succumb to damp problems than other options.

Furniture

Keep furnishings low slung to distract from vertically challenged rooms. Opt for long, lean sofas with a comfy squishy seat and seek out designs that have shorter legs to 'pull' the eye down further. Keeping basement level floor space as free as possible will allow for good circulation so consider drawing a sectional modular L shaped sofa against one wall, positioning occasional tables at either end and adding side 'mood' lighting to create ambience. Or go funky retro! In a recent Vancouver rec' room conversion we added bean bags and the results were fabulous. What's more, our owners were so impressed that they're currently installing more bags upstairs! Yup, it's all about context and being prepared to forgo apprehensions and try new (or is that old!) ideas.

Two For One

to squeeze optimum flexibility from your family room. At the end of the day your space should be as multi-functional as possible, so remember, for example, to incorporate surfaces where your children can do homework under close supervision while you catch up with your favourite DVD.

Hills' lure too much for many

IntelleVision

Rick McGinnis

rick.mcginnis@metronews.ca

THE TV CRITIC VERSION OF STOCKHOLM SYNDROME:

Given a choice of watching my own death, in slow motion, set to a soundtrack of emo bands or an episode of The Hills, I'd choose the former without a moment's hesitation.

Still, the mere existence of MTV's hot hit "reality" show fascinates me to no end — but not enough to actually contemplate watching the thing. My suspicion is that, for TV critics and other people somehow concerned with the viability of the medium, knowing that The Hills is out there is like searching out the highest hilltop to watch the planet-killing asteroid arc across the sky on its way to ending all life on earth; you know it's out there, and that nothing will ever be the same again, but there's nothing you can do to stop it, so you'd might as well enjoy the brilliant, fiery, jagged scar as it's cutting through the atmosphere.

Time magazine's James Poniewozik has it bad for The Hills, as he confessed in a paean to the show published last week. "Yes, The Hills is fake," he admits right off the top. "Fake in the sense that producers and participants acknowledge reshooting scenes and doing multiple takes. Fake in the sense that MTV's beautiful 'stars' are famous for little more than being on The Hills. "And fake in that it's proof that a beautiful shot and a well-chosen sound track can imitate emotion in even the most banal scene."

On second thought, though, Poniewozik prefers the word "artifice" to "fake," and his enthusiasm for the show is hardly deterred by words like "shallow" either.

"It all sounds shallow, and, O.K., it is," he practi-James Poniewozik waxes poetic about The Hills in Time magazine. "It doesn't just look better than life. It looks better than TV," he writes.

cally swoons. "The surfaces are precisely what make The Hills entrancing; it is possibly the best-looking series on television. It doesn't just look better than life. It looks better than TV. Where most reality shows use garish close-ups to show hot emotions, The Hills uses middle- and long-range shots in wide-screen, giving it a cooler feel and framing the subjects like art photography. It's full of liquid L.A. sun, in love with the way light plays on surfaces — car bodies, plate glass, glossed lips."

Poniewozik has obviously penetrated much closer to the heart of The Hills' appeal — an appeal that's obviously there, though I've been utterly unable to divine its precise nature, or access any part of myself, past or present, that might have responded to The Hill's very circumscribed but exhaustively chronicled slice of life.

"It's life, if you were young, lucky and beautiful and had your own cinematographer and soundtrack curator," Poniewozik insists.

"If this is fake, maybe reality is overrated." More to the point, it's hard to imagine that other networks aren't eager to learn the lesson being taught by The Hills' success, which is that if this is reality TV, then maybe fake TV is overrated.

Rick McGinnis writes about music, movies, books and television, but not opera.

But the 25-year-old, now the face of beauty giant Lancome, is happy with her imperfections because they lend her face character.

"I wanted a nose job, but now, my nose is what lets me change my face a lot and I can be glamorous as Agent 99 (in Get Smart), then look rough as a drug addict for (director) Jonathan Demme (in the forthcoming movie Rachel Getting Married)," Hathaway said.

"Your face needs to have character if you're an actor, otherwise you're just a face," she added.

Ex-Idol hopeful welcomes son

BABY NEWS Former American Idol contestant Clay Aiken and music producer Jaymes Foster welcomed a baby boy Friday, the singer said in a statement on his website.

Parker Foster Aiken was born at a North Carolina hospital. In May, it was confirmed that Foster, 50, became pregnant via in vitro fertilization, People.com reports.

Though they are not romantically linked, Foster and Aiken plan to raise the child together.

"This makes no sense at all..."

by Joe O'Neill

Clay Aiken is a father, and claims on his website that the baby was delivered at 8:08 a.m. on 08/08/08. That's not the least bit creepy, Clay. No word on how close they came to naming the baby "Beijing Olympics Aiken."

I have to hand it to Ty Murray, who just married Jewel. Not only does he seem like a regular guy, he's a regular guy who's apparently been able to withstand 10 straight years of Jewel singing round-the-house a cappella versions of her 1996 hit Who Will Sayay-aye Your Soul without suffering a complete mental collapse, or doing what I would have done, and asking her whether or not that's a rhetorical question.

Anne Hathaway's sentiments about avoiding plastic surgery are admirable, but they show that our Anne hasn't been following the awards shows lately. In 2003, the Oscars handed the statuette to the fake-nose sporting Nicole Kidman for playing Virginia Woolf in The Hours. The following year, both Renée Zellweger and Charlize Theron took home statuettes for using dirt, makeup and prosthetics to appear unattractive in movie roles. The lesson is obvious. Do whatever it takes to make yourself as purty as possible in real life, then take a part as an ugly duckling novelist, serial killer, or scrappy farmhand, and it's Oscar time, baby!

You have to admit, Paris Hilton is breaking new ground. She's usually in the news for opening something quite different than a nightclub. As for the name, even though I failed out of law school, I'm fairly certain the makers of Valtrex won't let her have that name for her club.

"Eva owns a restaurant called Beso in Hollywood and is set to launch another in Vegas," says a source. "She asked Victoria to come on board and help. Victoria was thrilled and talked it through with her husband David, but he thought she was spreading herself a bit thin."

Victoria will still reportedly get involved in the venture — she'll reportedly oversee the guest list for the launch night.
